

Case 1 – Pharynx, Easy

Diagnosis – Pharyngeal Pouch

A pharyngeal pouch or Zenker's diverticulum is a relatively common finding. It arises from a weakness in the posterior pharynx just above cricopharyngeus. To make the diagnosis the diverticulum must be present throughout – a transient outpouching is not a true pouch.