

Case 13 – Oesophagus, Hard

Diagnosis – Dysphagia Lusoria

Dysphagia lusoria occurs when a patient has dysphagia secondary to an aberrant right subclavian artery. Compression of the oesophagus by an aberrant right subclavian artery is usually incidental (as in this case), which is fortunate as surgery to treat this is high risk.